Alley Row Terminates in the Court. Mary Crown's Testimony Not Credited and the Case Was Dismissed. Mr. Draney's Pain and the Blackberry Brandy He Took to Relieve It.

There was an air of languor in the police court this morning, which was shared by all the attaches, from Col. Dan Williams to Mr. Michael Flynn.

It was probably due to the fact that last night the Red, White and Blue Club had their annual excursion to Marshall Hall. The backbone of this club is made of these attaches, and to a man they attended.

Mike Flynn paced in gloomy grandeur the worn matting covering the corridor. He had a grievance and used no superhuman efforts to conceal it.

On the grounds the club had a cake walk, the cake being awarded by the judges to a couple that Mike thought were utterly disqualified to receive it.

He had rooted, cheered, and created sympathy for the pair maneuvered, and when 11 got the iced confection, with 7 as second choice, the bitterness of defeat entered Mike's usually genial soul.

Today Dan Williams, in discussing the affair, was congratulating himself that everything had passed off without a hitch, when Flynn interrupted him.

MIKE'S DISAGREEMENT.

"So you think, sir, so you think," said Mike, gravely, "that, then, me y's judges must have been crap shooters?"

"Crap shooters?" remarked Dan, in surprise. "How is that?"

"Aisy," said Mike. "It was either come sivil or come elvin, an' b' the powers, it was elvin, and much I think of their civility. As for yourself, Dan," continued Mike, beginning to relax, "where was your vice when you called out the winners?"

"Where do you think?" replied the colonel, who prides himself on having a De Reszke barytone.

"Faith, I caught you were talkin' to yourself," laughed Mike, "for niver a word did I hear."

"Why, Dan," and Flynn cast a conspiratorial glance at the other, "why didn't you bring your little Rappahannock droun an' make a size with these fellows?"

The colonel took the jest good naturedly and this healed the dissatisfaction in Flynn's breast.

Judge Kimball had a large dock and a very tiresome one. The first case was an alley row, which consumed considerable time. It was a charge of profanity against two sisters, Hattie and Alice Taylor, the principal witness being the notorious Mary Crown.

All the parties live in an alley off Half street and are on bad terms with each other, which culminates in the Crown woman swearing out a warrant against the Taylor sisters. Mary was backed up by Reuben Johnson, who apostrophized the court as if he were addressing a turkey camp-meeting.

"Judge, yo' omah, an' people," he said, flinging his arms around, "dese beah gals goes out on de high ways, de by ways, and de alley ways, a-cussin', an' a-cussin' an' a-cussin'."

ADMONISHED BY THE JUDGE. "Come to the point. What did they say?" demanded the judge.

"What did dey say?" asked Reuben, interrogatively.

"You heard the question. Answer it," said Mr. Pugh, losing patience.

"Raf'er wud I not," said Reuben, solemnly. He is a one-eyed man, and the other eye is bad, and he is a great deal of a fellow.

"You better had," rejoined Mr. Pugh, whereupon the witness carefully retailed the words alleged to have been said by the defendants. After him came Mary, who narrated, because of the Edmunds act, some time ago, a white street fakir.

She testified in the vilest manner, and disgusted the court spectators.

"Stop aside woman," said the judge, pounding, "and you girls come up here."

Hattie and Alice said because they refused to speak to the Crown woman, she swore out the warrant.

"Your honor," said Mr. Pugh, "I put no dependence upon the testimony of Mary Crown. You know her reputation, and I think the case should be dismissed."

Judge Kimball availed himself of the opportunity to comment on the waste of time in bringing such cases in court.

"I am thoroughly disgusted with these alley rows. Some steps should be taken to prevent the issuance of warrants under these circumstances. Case is dismissed."

Hereafter it will be a difficult thing for Mary to procure a warrant.

Thomas Draney was arrested last night for disorderly conduct. After the officer had testified Thomas, pallid and shaking, asked for clemency.

"Your honor, I haven't been arrested for twenty years, and that time Judge Snell let me off."

"What do you want to get drunk for?" asked the court. "I can't understand where the pleasure comes in."

"I didn't drink for pleasure," replied Draney; "I drank for pain."

"What's that?" asked the court in surprise. "Explain yourself."

"It was this way," said Draney, putting one hand over the last button of his vest. "Yesterday I had chills and took several nips of blackberry. Until it got the better of me."

The judge and the prosecution exchanged smiles.

"Blackberry," remarked his honor, as if to himself.

"Oh, blackberry," exclaimed Mr. Pugh, dramatically, "how many crimes are committed in thy name."

The policeman said a good word for the prisoner, and the court released him, warning Draney to avoid all kinds of berries that would benumb his senses.

A GRIEVOUS WRONG.

Ida Sterns a young woman in a grass-green shirt waist, duck skirt, gold eye-glasses and a confident manner, suffered at the hands of Carpenter John Knapp the most grievous wrong woman can endure from man. He not only smashed her trust but a bran new hat which she had just received from the milliner. She has been rooming at Knapp's house, No. 2221 Tenth street northwest, and is a good friend of his wife, who appeared in court with the plaintiff. Last night Knapp came home in a high state of intoxication, and, dragging Mrs. Sterns—for, according to him, she is married—trunk from the room, he flung it down stairs out in the street on top of the luckless bandbox, which he threw out first.

Marching back to the dining room, he relieved his over-charged feelings by smashing a sugar bowl, when Policeman Roswell arrived and arrested him for destroying private property.

"Now, Miss Sterns, tell the court about this," said Mr. Pugh.

The plaintiff, her eyes flashing through the Scotch pebbles, said: "He broke my trunk, scattered the things all over the pavement, and, worst of all, utterly and completely, Judge, ruined my new hat. I had just paid $5 for it."

Mrs. Sterns looked as if she could indulge in a hearty cry.

"Your honor," said Knapp, "that woman there left her husband and two children. She came to my house and we gave her a home out of pity. She's working now at Kozel's saloon, and said the other day she always drank eight glasses of beer and a whisky cocktail before going to bed, and I don't think she is fit to associate with my daughters."

WHY HE DID IT. Knapp said he had warned his wife not to go with Mrs. Sterns, and when she came home yesterday and found them preparing to go down the river, he ordered Mrs. Sterns to leave.

"She wouldn't go," said Knapp, "so I handed her trunk out on the porch."

He said nothing was broken.

"The lock was busted clean off," interjected Mrs. Sterns, indignantly, "and my," here she hesitated, "that is, my clothes strewn on the sidewalk."

"Your honor, there isn't a word of truth in this man's statement," said Mr. Pugh. "His wife is bestirring court to testify if she could, but, of course, a wife can't testify against her husband."

Knapp said he wasn't drunk and the policeman said he was.

The court fined him $5 and Mrs. Knapp and her woman friend departed, while Knapp walked sadly to the cells.
